

Contributors

Reiland Rabaka teaches in the Department of Ethnic Studies at the University of Colorado at Boulder, where he is also a faculty fellow at the Center for Studies of Ethnicity and Race in America (CSERA). He is the author of W.E.B DuBois and the Problems of the Twenty- First Century: An Essay of Africana Critical Theory.

R.Sophie Statzel is pursuing a doctorate in Anthropology at the Graduate Center of the City University of New York. Her research areas include nationalist movements in North America, the politicization of the family in conservative politics, anti racist education, and critical race theory.

Jonathan Gayles is currently Assistant Professor of African American Studies at Georgia State University. An applied anthropologist, his primary areas of interest are African American achievement and educational policy. He is also interested in the social construction of race and racial themes in popular culture.

Sarah Tobin received her Master's in Applied Anthropology for the University of South Florida. She is currently pursuing her Ph.D. in Anthropology at Boston University. Her research interests include identity communication and mediation by way of consumption practices among Muslims in Egypt.

Isabell Cserno is completing the Ph.D. in American Studies at the University of Maryland where she is an Ann G. Wylie Dissertation Fellow. She was awarded a previous fellowship from the Smithsonian National Museum of American History

David Covin is professor emeritus of Government and Pan African Studies at California State University, Sacramento. A prolific scholar on the subjects exploring the experiences of African Americans he is becoming a recognized expert on the subject of Afro Brazilian politics. His most recent publication is a book on the subject of the Black movement in Brazil.